How does he react to things that are not necessarily in that script? These are all ways that I try and make a character real. Obviously, there are some limitations with the radio play, where the audience can't see that person, but sometimes that can set an audience free . . . I was lucky enough to do all of my scenes with [Lindsay Whisler] and Billy Boyd in the studio. So as an actor, I was able to kind of bounce off those actors.

The challenge for me is always: can I make people believe that this person existed or is existing actually now?

What's it like to go to work with your friends?
